Troops Waist Deep in Water in Trenches During Artillery Fire Along the Meuse

FAMOUS RHEIMS CATHEDRAL IN FLAMES FROM BOMBARDMENT

LONDON, Sept. 20, 10:10 p. m.—Reports from the front say the Exchange Telegraph Company's Paris correspondent shows that the French and British troops are fighting waist-deep in water, the rains having flooded their trenches.

LONDON, Sept. 21, 3:50 a. m.—A dispatch to the Express says that the bombardment of Rheims began on Friday from German batteries posted six miles north of the city. The first shots shattered the priceless old windows of the cathedral, which was flying the Red Cross flag, owing to the fact that 500 wounded German prisoners were under care there.

Of these 150 suffered further wounds during the bombardment. Four hundred inhabitants of the town were killed during the bombardment, the dispatch says, which continued through Saturday. All of the historic buildings in the neighborhood of the cathedral have been destroyed, and much of the town is now in flames. The population is flying to the south-west.

LONDON, Sept. 20, 9:45 p. m.—One of the fiercest battles of all times, which has been raging across northern France for nearly a week, has taken a slight advantage on one side, and then on the other, remains undecided.

The great armies which have been fighting for a month with few, if any, intermissions, have dug themselves into entrenchments on rivers and mountains, and have been fighting for the Meuse to the Meuse, and thence southward along the Franco-German frontier.

Artillery duels, such as never have been seen before, are being carried on with the hope of compelling the evacuation of the strongly held positions with occasional successes on the part of the Oise to the Meuse, and thence southward along the Franco-German frontier.

NO TIME FOR UNITED STATES TO INTERFERE THINKS PRESIDENT

Peace Talk at Washington Lessens---Diplomats Fear War Will Spread Further---Turkey Is Not Anxious to Mix in It

WASHINGTON, Sept. 20.—President Wilson feels that the opportune moment for the United States government to effectively exert its influence for peace in Europe has not arrived. This was stated today on the highest authority. For the present, it was said, unofficial and informal efforts to persuade the warring governments to press for peace in Europe would be unavailing. The President has learned that Great Britain, Russia and France particularly, are in no mood to talk peace, notwithstanding rumors and intimations that have come from Berlin as to the alleged wishes of Germany for a discussion of terms.

There is a steady diminution here of peace talk. Instead, the possibility of an extension of the European conflict to Italy and Rumania, are being discussed among well-informed officials. "Rumania will follow Italy," said the report of an American diplomatic officer recently. Since then have been added evidences of an entente between Rome and Bucharest. In both countries popular demonstrations in favor of the allies have been frequent.

Press dispatches have recorded the uneasiness of Austria over Italy's mobilization along the northern frontier, and the concentration of Austrian forces along the Italian border. Indications from official dispatches point to the probable junction of Rumanian forces with Serbia in the offensive against Austria.

The addition of Rumania's army would relieve the Russian forces somewhat, and perhaps increase Russian activity in East Prussia. These are among the speculations heard in diplomatic circles.

Practically no change has occurred in the situation in Turkey, according to official telegrams. Russia's victories, it is believed by diplomats of the allied countries, have had a sobering effect on the war party at Constantinople. As October 1 approaches, when the abrogation of the capitulations becomes effective, it is expected the question of Turkey's neutrality soon will be definitely settled. It has been regarded as significant here that Italy joined France, Great Britain and Russia in protesting against the abrogation of the conventions.

From the Far East, such advice as have been received, describe the activities of the Japanese as careful and deliberate, their movements being executed slowly to enable them to intensify Kichow with the least possible loss of life.

Washington's diplomats received comparatively nothing new today about activities in the war zone. Acting Secretary Robert Lansing of the State Department sent to all embassies and legations a copy of the memorandum by which the United States will be guided in its observance of neutrality with respect to merchant ships. This concludes a long discussion on phases of neutrality which have been before the department.

Force one of the largest crowds ever assembled in Golden Gate park, war upon war was waged today, the occasion being the second of a series of mass meetings held under the auspices of the San Francisco Examiner in the interest of world-wide peace.

Mayor James Rolph, Jr., was president of the meeting. He outlined the purpose of the movement. To his appeal were added those of H. B. Hale, vice-president of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition; Mrs. Mary Austin, the novelist, and Charles S. Wheeler.

Resolutions were adopted and telegraphed to President Wilson, urging him to do all in his power to end the war in Europe.

The rabble occupied but a few minutes, and when it was finished, the two men pulled the bell cord and got off at Zehab, a station four miles beyond Burbank.

The truth proceeded to Chatsworth Park, where the truth crew telegraphed the sheriff's office here. A posse was organized and started in search, but late tonight had found no trace of the robbers.

ASTORIA, Ore., Sept. 20.—The exact number of those who went down with the steam schooner Francis H. Leggett when she foundered in a gale sixty miles south of the Columbia river on Friday, probably will never be known. The Associated Oil Company's steamer Frank H. Buck, conveying the second of the Leggett's survivors into port, reached here today and brought no additional information as to the number that perished.

The passengers who were booked before sailing numbered thirty-six, while the crew was composed of twenty-five men, making a total of sixty-one. There were a number of passengers, however, that boarded the vessel at the last moment, whose names were not recorded in the log, among them being Alexander Parrell, one of the two survivors. According to Parrell, the Leggett had a full list of passengers, and with the crew totaled over seventy persons.

It was established today that none of the other vessels that went to the scene of the disaster had picked up any survivors. So far, no bodies have been recovered.

EL PASO, Texas, Sept. 20.—Two brigades of General Villa's troops began today an invasion of the state of Sonora. They departed from Juarez by train to Casa Grande, whence they will proceed overland into the western border state, to combat the Constitutional forces under General Benjamin Hill, who has refused to obey the commands of General Villa at against contrary orders from General Carranza.

It was stated today that the movement of nearly 5,000 Villa soldiers into Sonora had been made contrary to the sanction of General Obregon, commander in chief of the Constitutional forces, of which Sonora is a part. Carranza's deposed secretary of war, is in charge of the movement in Sonora, in place of Obregon.

Agents of the Carranza government expressed the opinion that Hill would submit the invasion of Sonora, where Governor Maytorena also has begun a rebellion against the central government.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 20.—The death of Lieutenant William E. Allen, commanding the revenue cutter Suchoanah at Long Angeles last night, was announced here today. Lieutenant Allen served on the cutter McCulloch, Admiral Dewey's dispatch boat, which was used to draw Spanish fire at the battle of Manila. He is a native of the District of Columbia and was appointed in the service from New York in 1906.

Two Men Get on Southern Pacific Train Near Los Angeles

LOS ANGELES, Sept. 20.—Two masked men held up and robbed passengers on the Lark, the north-bound Southern Pacific coast line train north of Burbank tonight. They secured $550 in cash and much jewelry.

The robbers boarded the rear end of the observation car as the train left Burbank, nine miles northwest of here, at 4:45 o'clock. Both were armed with sawed-off shot guns and revolvers. Both were similarly dressed in black and wore black masks.

Only the male passengers in the observation car were robbed. Three women who threw up their hands at the robbers' command were allowed to keep their money and jewelry. All the men were carefully searched by one of the men while the other kept the weapons trained on the victims.

Watches, rings and secret pins, some of which were taken from the pockets of nearly all the twenty-five passengers. There, with the money were put in a small sack which the robbers held forth with one hand, while he aided his partners in their search with the other.

The robbers occupied but a few minutes, and when it was finished, the two men pulled the bell cord and got off at Zehab, a station four miles beyond Burbank.

The truth proceeded to Chatsworth Park, where the truth crew telegraphed the sheriff's office here. A posse was organized and started in search, but late tonight had found no trace of the robbers.

NON-PARTISAN NOW.

One of the most important planks in the California Progressive platform this year is a promise to extend the system of non-partisan primaries to the remaining state offices. This is one case in which the action of the people has already outstripped even the proposals of the Progressive leaders, and has already established in fact what it is now promised to enact in law.

When it was proposed to extend the non-partisan system to county offices, a conference of leading members of the legislature was held in Governor Johnson's office, and the question was discussed whether the same system might not be extended to state and legislative offices. Every member of that conference was personally favorable to the extension, but the majority feared that to take so radical a step at once would be going too fast for the people, and it was therefore agreed to include this time only the county officers. But when the primary elections arrived it was found that the people refused to be bound by party lines, even in the case of state officials. In spite of the indignant protests of the politicians of their organizations, the voters of the Republican and Democratic parties insisted on giving the nominations of these parties to the Progressive candidates, and it is now evident that even Governor Johnson, against whom the chief partisan indignation of the politicians was directed, could have received both the Republican and the Democratic nominations, in addition to the Progressive one, if his name had been placed on the party ballots as an aspirant to these nominations. Even as it was, over twenty thousand Republicans and Democrats thronged in his name, and most of his colleagues on the Progressive state ticket were actually nominated also by the Republicans and Democrats.

The same thing happened in the case of a very large number of candidates for the legislature. Party lines were broken even in nominations for Congress, which theoretically ought to be partisan. In the two districts in San Francisco, Congressman Kahn has received both the Republican and Progressive nominations, and Congressman Nolan, the Progress and Republican and Democratic nominations. Congressman Kent, who is an independent, and does not belong to any party, has received the Progressive and probably the Democratic nominations, though his name did not appear on any of the ballots.

In other words, party lines have already been so completely broken by the action of the people in insisting on making nominations irrespective of party lines, that the non-partisan law when passed will be a mere ratification of what the people have already done.

"THERE IS NO PEACE"

James Rolph, Jr., R. H. Hale, Mary Austin and Charles S. Wheeler—than whom there are no better people anywhere—accepted the invitation of W. R. Hearst and made extremely good speeches at an extremely good meeting assembled in San Francisco yesterday in response to extremely good advertising in Mr. Hearst's extremely good advertising medium. At the close, very excellent resolutions on behalf of peace, prepared by one of Mr. Hearst's best young men, were telegraphed to President Wilson. All of which was very good publicity for Mr. Hearst, very good entertainment for the audience, and a very pleasant recognition of some very excellent speeches. With the actual hastening of peace it had to do—exactly nothing at all.

Meanwhile comes the definite announcement from President Wilson that he does not regard the time opportune to make any advances in the direction of peace. Mr. Bryan did make one advance, on a transparently impossible rumor, and his press agent gave out some hastily optimistic reports, but as soon as actual communication was opened, it was evident that any proceeding of the issue would merely mean a snubbing that might be embarrassing later, when the time comes for real efforts. So the President has taken the matter in his own hands, to shut off any further risk of well-meaning blundering on the part of either of the strange new allies, Hearst and Bryan.

And the news of the actual fighting is simply that of a gigantic "lug-of-war." When two evenly balanced teams grasp the rope and seek to drag it across the mark, they are likely to pull for a long time without budging it either way. The hardest part of the pulling, in fact, comes at the stage when nothing is accomplished by it. The victory comes after both are weakened, and goes to the side which is weakened least. The same thing seems to be happening in this greatest battle in history, which has been going on now for a month. Nobody is strong enough to win that battle, but eventually someone will be weak enough to lose it. Until then, it is impossible even to think of peace.

Only one thing decisive seems now developing. If it were possible to isolate the war in southeastern Europe, Austria and Turkey would be crushed.

And these are precisely the only governments whose crushing would involve no irreparable loss.

Whatever possibilities of development there may be in Turkish civilization, these possibilities must be realized in Asia. Turkey in Europe is a pure obstructive intrusion. Turkey is maintained in Europe, not by its own strength, but by the inertia of the powers, who find it a convenient stop-gap against Russia. Hence this dependence on the powers, Turkey is also subservient to them, and must remain so while it is in Europe. The best thing that could happen to Turkey would be to be driven out of Europe. And if this could have happened, long ago, Europe would have been spared the horror of universal war.

Likewise Austria: The break-up of the Austrian empire would destroy a nation. Austria is not a nation. It is an artificial line, drawn on the map around a number of nations. These nations would remain if the line were erased. German Austria would be back in Germany, where it belongs, and the Slavic Austrian states would take their respective places in the development of the new Slavic world.

So the only "crushing" immediately imminent is also in the only place where it would not set back the world, but the unfortunate Alliance of European militarism leaves it impossible to visualize the "crushing." Austria cannot be crushed without crushing Germany, and that would be a calamity unspeakable. The life of the various peoples that now constitute the Austria-Hungarian dual monarchy might go on all the better if their individuality were restored, or if they were re-aligned according to their actual racial affiliations. But the life of Germany would be set back irreparably if its unity were disrupted, or if its independence were jeopardized. And the life of Germany, with all the drawbacks of its militarism, is precisely the most forward-moving force in Germany.

And while Turkey might be crushed without directly crushing any part of Western Europe, the resultant expansion of Russia would probably be regarded as a menace even by Russia's fiercest allies. Just as the league of the three emperors of Eastern Europe was broken up, in 1878, by Germany's refusal to permit Russia to enjoy the fruits of its victory over Turkey, so the Triple Entente would probably now balk at allowing its chief member to attain its chief ambition.

This does the balance of power of Western Europe forbid the acceptance of a decisive settlement of the war in the only place where such a settlement is now in sight—and the only place, in fact, where there was ever anything to settle.

And "gentlemen cry Peace! Peace!" but there is no peace.

ENTRENCHED ARMIES
FIGHT RESULTLESS
BATTLE IN STORM

That his governor will be interned at Torgau, (Prussia).

"The Saxon army has been broken up, and its commander, General von Hausen, has been relieved of his command. The cavalry division of the same nationality, which had fought at Lorraine at the opening of the campaign, and was later sent to Russia, has shared the downfall of the Russian army and must have suffered severe losses."

Say French Hard Up.

BERLIN, Sept. 20, by wireless. — To Sayville, L. I.—The German press says today:

"The specie reserve in the Reichsbank last week increased by 41,000,000 marks ($10,250,000), and the circulation notes decreased by 38,000,000 marks ($14,500,000)."

"A Paris financial newspaper says the French economic crisis is very severe, and that if it lasts much longer it will prove disastrous."

"The Italian senator, Count Serravallo, has sent a communication to the Giornale d'Italia (a Rome newspaper), saying that during a dinner, July 22, in which Sir Edward Grey, (British foreign minister, and Sir William Edward Goschen, (former British ambassador to Germany, took part, it was stated that the only way to avoid civil war over the home rule question was war with Germany."

"A war correspondent of the anti-German Messager (a Rome journal), complains that the German Red Cross is a much better organization than that of the French."

"Hon. Aubrey Herbert, member of parliament, who was among those wounded in a German hospital and taken by the British, expresses his thanks for the courtesy shown him in the German hospital, and praises the humanity of the German soldiers."

"The original of an order issued by General Remontenault to the 21st infantry regiment, (Russian), has been found. It says: 'General Orders: Dismiss while flags; do not respect them.'"

Artillery Battle.

FROM THE BATTLE FRONT, Sept. 20, via wire, 5:30 p. m.—The bulk of the allied armies remained today in the trenches waiting while their artillery exchanged a furious cannonade with the strongly placed German batteries.

Some brilliant fountains of arms were performed at various points on the line, extending along the Oise, the Aisne and the Vesdre. The seasoned Algerian troops made a gallant capture of another German flag.

Julius Vedrines, the noted French aviator, was credited with a courageous fight in mid-air with a German aviator whom he brought to earth. The German was duly recognized for the position of the allies when Vedrines descended.

The Great Trials of History

TRIAL OF
DR. THATCHER GRAVES.

"Hence do not hold any autopsy on my remains. The cause of death may be rendered as follows: 'Died from persecution; without; exhausted.'"

This was the death message left by Dr. Thatcher Graves, who committed suicide in his cell of the jail at Denver, Colo., on September 2, 1914. Dr. Graves had been accused and convicted of the crime of poisoning Mrs. Barnaby in Denver and his trial forms one of the most interesting chapters of the criminal history of the Rocky Mountain region. The prosecution of Graves was one of the most brilliant and vigorous of anything ever witnessed in Colorado, chiefly through the efforts of John Conrad, a son-in-law of the murdered woman, a millionaire, some owner and one of the most prominent men of the state of Montana.

The defense of Dr. Graves was undertaken by strong friends from the East, who employed eminent legal talent. The news of Mrs. Barnaby's death had been reported in the Denver people one morning in April, 1911. There was a deep mystery as to who was responsible for having placed the poisonous substance in the bottle from which Mrs. Barnaby had drunk.

Dr. Thatcher Graves had been a close friend of Mrs. Barnaby and upon him the woman relied considerably in her business affairs. When her death was announced, Dr. Graves, who at the time was in Providence, R. I., sent word that he would go to Denver to take charge of the body. When he arrived there a large crowd met him at the station, for there were already rumors afloat implicating him in the tragedy.

The writing on the bottle of the alleged poison had been a week and promises to continue for many days longer.

Military experts here believe that the longer the battle endures, the better it will be for the allied armies, who thus will be able to pour strong forces of fresh troops to places where they are needed along the front.

Along the western end of the battle line, Rheims has been the object of the greatest attention from the Germans, who, time after time, have vainly attempted to break through the allied lines, after subjecting the town to an intense bombardment. It is the German intention, it is understood, to capture Rheims, which is an important rail road junction, the possession of which would give them command of another road to the north. They have made an especial mark of the magnificent cathedral, which has been in flames since yesterday.

The allies, meantime, have made for themselves a strong position on the right bank of the Aisne, where they occupy all the heights. The Germans have taken advantage of the sites of the forts which were intended for the defense of Rheims, but which were abandoned by the allies when the invaders made a rapid dash southward from Belgium.

A heavy hailstorm, with a cold wind, added today to the hardships of the entrenched troops, who are entirely without tents, but did not affect their spirits, which are high. All the commissaries, departments of the allies are working splendidly; the men are well fed and clothed, and are contented.

The German army when it left Chateau, one of its chief magazines, and a corps of nurses in charge of a hospital filled with German and French wounded. The French medical officers found the hospital so well managed, and the French wounded so well treated, that the German surgeon was left in charge.

CHRISTIANIA, via London, Sept. 20.—Dr. Edvard Munch, former Norwegian minister to Great Britain, issued a sensational statement in this quiet and punctiliously neutral capital, when he stated before an assembly composed of prominent members of the cabinet and students of Christiania University, that Norway's situation is as precarious as that of Belgium.

Dr. Munch's proposal for one year compulsory service in the army was coldly received by the members of the government, but with cheers from the remainder of the audience. He used the fate of Belgium as an argument for ample preparation in Norway.

Vest Pocket Essays
GEORGE FITCH
Author of "At Good Old Sings" Spies

A spy is about the only man who in this country, and less abroad. We can get hanged without being disgraced.

In fact, being hanged makes a hero out of a spy. If Nathan Hale had died a Revolutionary veteran, but he had not been hanged for his country and thereby become one of the big men of colonial history.

It is a spy's duty to slip stealthily through the enemy's lines disguised as a farmer or a factory workman, or a school teacher, and so on, and so on, up all available information that will be useful to his commander. One successful spy is as disastrous to the enemy as a dozen sledge hammers. Naturally he is very unpopular with the hated foe. When a spy is caught he is a traitor, and he is not allowed to change his name, even to the Supreme Court, or plead insanity or extreme provocation. The sole object of the traitor is to hang him, and it usually succeeds in doing this in about twenty-four hours.

A spy gets $13 a month and board, and a few dollars for his expenses. He is a spy, from which Mrs. Barnaby had drunk the fatal dose, stated that it was from "Friends in the Woods." The poison was drunk at the home of the woman, in Denver, and they took the precaution to preserve the bottle. Then Graves' arrival in Denver, he registered at the leading hotel, and the ink had hardly dried before an enterprising newspaper had deftly cut it out and compared it with the specimen of penmanship in the hands of the district attorney. Strong points of resemblance were noted. It was plain that the writing on the bottle had been done in a disguised hand.

Reports began to be circulated after the murder to the effect that Dr. Graves had not been able to account for the funds with which he had been entrusted by Mrs. Barnaby, and therefore he had planned the death of one who had been his benefactor. The grand jury of Arapahoe county, on the strength of the gossip, summoned indicted Graves for the murder of Mrs. Barnaby, but he was allowed bail and the trial did not take place until late in the fall of 1911. In the meantime the prisoner became a noted figure on the streets of Denver, and to slight extent moved in the society opened to him by the standing of his attorneys, Judge Furman and Judge Mayson. He was a handsome man, over six feet in height, always well dressed and looked the personification of a prosperous professional man.

After the lawyers had settled the preliminaries of the great legal battle that was to come, the chemists had their day. It was definitely determined that the supposed whiskey was a poorly made decoction, in which port wine, extracts of peaches and water were the ingredients. Had Mrs. Barnaby tasted it instead of swallowing the drink poured out, her life would not have been in danger. The personality of the attorneys employed on both sides was remarkable in many ways. Nothing was left undone to try the New England physician, John Conrad, the son-in-law, opened palatial headquarters in Denver at one of the leading hotels and spent thousands of dollars before and during the trial to make Graves' escape from the death sentence possible. He brought witnesses thousands of miles from the New England states, hired detectives by the dozen and had all the machinery of the law at his command.

During the early days of the trial, was self-possessed. When the web of terrible facts became stronger he began to lose his nerve. He finally insisted, against the advice of his lawyers, on going on the witness stand in his own defense. He broke down and contradicted himself in a damaging way when under the fire of cross-examination.

After the verdict finding him guilty was returned, he felt confident that the State Supreme court would grant him a new trial. While his lawyers were before that tribunal with the case he was in the state penitentiary at Canon City, cheerful and hopeful. But the strain proved even too much for his robust physique. He thought that a new trial had been granted and he was in a state of collapse when he was taken to the big expense of prosecuting him. In this he was mistaken. The approach of his second trial formed his determination to kill himself. He succeeded in spite of the fact that he was a prisoner, by taking poison.

INDUSTRIAL JUSTICE AND THE OPEN SHOP

Editor Republican:—In your editorial of September 15 on the labor question, headed "Don't Let It Scatter," your conception of the objects of the M. M. and E. are not consistent with the motives of this organization. The M. M. and E. is not opposed to organized labor, but it is opposed to organized unions and to the domination of any and every form, in any form, organization or association. It stands for a "square deal," equal justice to all, both labor and capital.

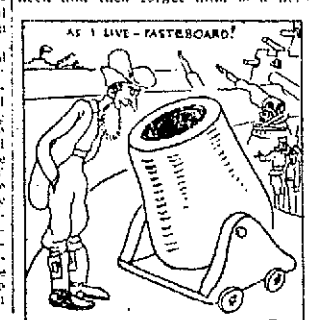

You state that "what we want is industrial peace." You are quite right in this. It is what we all desire, but we do not want industrial peace at any cost. Every employer of labor shall have the unqualified right, and he is protected in this right, to employ whom he may choose, union or non-union, that they shall work side by side that all intimidation, boycott, in every form, the use of any material without union labels attached, or election in any form, shall forever cease. Until this constitutional right is guaranteed to every citizen of the United States, this fight will continue to the bitter end.

And you must not misinterpret this movement in thinking it confined to the business men, merchants and manufacturers. In fact, the mass of the people, the common citizens, representatives of calling or profession, are with us and will continue to support this movement until industrial peace shall have been established on a firm and just basis. Candidly, can you find any fault with these declarations, or do you approve of injustice and oppression of one class as against another?

Respectfully yours,

M. A. BROADBENT.

(Mr. Broadbent carefully avoids the essential point—as do all the advocates of the M. M. and E. Under the domination of its sort of "open shop" would the union men, men who work through the union, or individually? If the latter, and that is the case when ever the M. M. and E. controls, then there is no unionism, even if all the men belong to the union.—Editor Republican.)

"It is a spy's duty to codd up all available information that will be useful to his commander."

and his widow should take great pride in his memory.

Still, it does seem as if the nation could do better make it a little easier for spies. They are as necessary as generals, and it doesn't seem fair to hang them when so many contractors who sell rotten supplies to the soldier boys are enjoying phenomenal good health.

Many a man doubts if he will be able to make the payments; he doubts if he will be able to pick out the right kind of land; he doubts if he will hold his job long enough; HE DOUBTS! HE DOUBTS! HE DOUBTS!

My dear friend, if you be one of those men I know you can be cured. You are not the only Doubter in the world. Many other people even in higher positions doubt. Even a good many people doubt that Roosevelt discovered the River of Doubt.

If you will tell me just how you are fixed now, what you want to do, I know I can help you. Not many days ago a man came into my office. He told me that he wanted ten acres of land, but that he could not just now see his way clear to buy and pay for it. We talked the matter over a little while and by shifting things around a little he not only saw how he could buy, but he saw how he could improve right away. Sometimes all a man needs is to talk things over with some one who will take a kindly interest, and who understands such matters. I will give you my best advice. ## CAMPAIGN AGAINST EIGHT-HOUR LAW

Series of Meetings to Be Held in Tulare County

VISALIA, Sept. 20.—Fruit growers and ranchers from all over the county assembled in the Board of Trade rooms in Visalia this afternoon to further the plans for a strenuous campaign against the proposed universal eight-hour law.

W. A. Sims, president of the County Farmers' Protective League, under whose auspices the meeting was held, opened the meeting. W. R. Van Noy of Dinuba made a full report of the state meeting held in Sacramento last week. Attorney E. L. Freeman of Visalia addressed the meeting, going into the legal aspects of the proposed law and the effects its passage would have on farm labor. Many names were added to the county organization and meetings were planned to cover the time till the November election.

MARICOPA BREVITIES

MARICOPA, Sept. 20.—With 253 pupils enrolled on the opening week of school on Monday, the fall and winter term was started off in the Maricopa public schools under the most auspicious circumstances. Both teachers and pupils started in on their duties on Monday with vim and Friday evening saw the work open with many additional enrollments coming in each day. Many families have not as yet returned from their vacations and many more pupils will be starting during the next week or two. All day was spent enrolling the children and assigning them to their grades. On Tuesday the regular studies were taken up and a good start was recorded.

The Maricopa high school enrolled seventeen pupils on Monday and the studies were started under the direction of Principal C. H. Winsor and Miss Nellie Duren.

On Monday the first grade, which is in charge of Miss Theresa Sletten, assisted by Miss Gladys Clark, enrolled 24 boys and 20 girls. # Interesting Stories With a Thrill

Dealing With the Proprietor

By Enos Emory

THIS is the first occasion that I've ever regretted not having married," said Miss Massey.

"I daresay you're happier as you are," he consoled her. "Marriage is a risky experiment. Easier to get into than out of, you know."

"Thank you. When I desire legal advice, I shall continue to consult my solicitors."

"Just so," was the unabashed reply. He extracted a cigarette from his case and lit it. "Pretty safe firm, I believe."

"Whichever they've given me every satisfaction," she said dryly.

"Good," said the youth dropping into a chair, "when you get hold of people like that, stick to 'em."

"Your advice confirms me in my intention. However, her glance took on an even more critical expression. "You are not all that I expected."

"None of us are," murmured the young man. He said it sadly, as one whose experience had rendered pessimistic. "Disappointment is simply realized expectation." He heaved a sigh. "I beg your pardon. The lady inclined her head.

"Your appearance," she continued, "is passable."

"Beauty is only skin deep," declared her listener modestly, "and even then it's liable to freckle."

"If you could restrain yourself from philosophical comment on my simple speech until I have finished," said Miss Massey sharply, "I should be obliged. However interesting, it is unnecessary."

"The interesting is always—" he interrupted himself with an effort. "I really nothing except her father's estate, and you will have in addition to mine a considerable sum in consolation, I don't anticipate any serious objection on her part."

"Charming girl!" said the young man. "I'm sure we should be happy, very."

His aunt shrugged her shoulders indifferently.

"I don't want to—in."

"Rush you," he suggested, as she groped for a word.

"To hasten your decision unduly," she said, with a frigid stare; "but I should like your answer before Col. Morgan comes this evening."

"Before, in fact," insinuated her nephew. "I've seen the girl."

"The girl," declared Miss Massey impatiently, "is much the same, I believe, as other girls. I fail to see what she has to do with it."

"Well, of course," admitted the young man, "you're only asking me to marry her, aren't you?"

"His aunt rose abruptly to her feet. "Suppose you take a stroll in the garden and think it over," she suggested.

"Have a look at what I'm thinking of," interrupted the youth. "All right. See you at tea, then."

"Pierce o'clock," Miss Massey called after him, as he disappeared through the French window.

On the lawn, Gerald Massey's attitude of disdain faded. The call of the land is the most seductive in the world. The man who owns a barren allotment in the neighborhood of a gas-works is an infinitely prouder man than a landless capitalist.

To be able to stand in the center of a lawn (even though the gardener watches the act of destruction with an anguished eye), and say, "This is mine," is to experience an emotion before which all other joys pale into obscurity.

It was this feeling which brightened Gerald's eye and gave to his step a proprietorial stateliness. With some severity he removed a twig from the lawn and set off on a critical inspection of his domain.

He wandered along for some time, clambering over a low wall, until he found himself in a small orchard, beneath an apple tree, whose wide-spreading branches offered an agreeable shade. He seated himself upon a wheelbarrow. His face was expressionless, but his brain was awash with thought.

For a while he sat reflecting on the peaceful joys of a farmer's life. His ignorance on the subject, as is obvious, was abysmal. And then something happened which awoke him to the realization that even a farmer's life was not without its element of danger. An apple fell from the tree and struck him on the head.

"Tom—!" he began, and then paused in amazement.

Stopping, he picked up the half-eaten apple and eyed it curiously. Licking to his feet, he glanced sternly at the branches. A young lady, somewhat inconspicuously perched upon a bough, returned his glance reprovingly.

"Go away!" she said peremptorily.

"Well," gasped the young man, "I go away."

"Yes," said the girl. "If you don't, I shall," she made a convulsive clutch at the trunk of the tree, her voice lost its threatening tone and became almost a wail. "I shall fall."

"I'll catch you," he assured her—she was an astonishingly pretty girl. "Jump!"

"You won't," she declared with considerable decision. "Go away at once." She jerked a shapely foot at him to give added weight to her command. The next moment she overbalanced and fell—a whirlwind of femininity—into his arms.

"How dare you!" she gasped. "Let me go!" "Let-me—?" As he released her she retreated a step and faced him, panting.

"Why didn't you say you were coming?" he demanded, breathing hard. "When I said jump, I didn't mean so suddenly. And you needn't have punched me in the ear."

"I didn't," cried the girl indignantly. "It was an accident."

"It was a deliberate punch," he asserted stubbornly.

The pink in the girl's cheeks deepened.

"That, yes. I meant it was an accident that I fell."

"Well, it was an accident that I caught you, too," he admitted candidly. He made a fruitless attempt to straighten his collar. "I hadn't time to jump clear."

"May I inquire," said the girl haughtily, "what you were doing under the tree at all?"

"Just what I was going to ask you. At least, what were you doing up the tree?"

"Ask me!" echoed the girl indignantly. She restrained herself with an effort. "Because I wanted an apple of course."

A slightly shocked expression came into the young man's face.

"But I say, you know," he protested, "you mustn't go trespassing and climbing people's trees—just because you want an apple. Don't you know that's

Pleasing Lydia's Will

By Annette Angert

JOSH TEBBUTT, the baker, a little withered man with extraordinarily bright eyes, hovered between the back room and the shop, as from time to time the villagers came in to claim each one his property in the shape of a pie, a tart, or a cake. Josh regarded the trays a trifle wistfully—the housewives of Weddsworth were well versed in the art of pandering to a sweet tooth; but Josh had never been able to turn out a successful cake.

The trays began to be depleted, for the afternoon was wearing on, and tea-time was imminent. Then there came a hill in the rush of callers, and the old man sat down. One tray was empty but for two cakes, one which had fallen in the middle, and was obviously accident, and a high, well-rounded, well-baked ginger cake, crowned with a curling strip of candied peel.

"That be one of Lydia Mason's ginger cakes," his the third she has sent this week. It has risen real well. Lydia's cakes all do rise."

He sighed. In this respect Lydia Mason's cakes did not resemble the few cakes he had attempted.

His reverie was broken in upon by a new influx of customers—children now out from school, who had been sent by their mothers. They stood looking up at him like a crowd of hungry young birds.

When Josh had waited upon each one there were only two cakes left on the counter. The two cakes were the ill-assorted neighbors he had noticed—Lydia Mason's ginger cake and the cake which had fallen in the baking.

There wandered in through the open window the fresh, sweet scent of mignonette. Josh's nostrils caught it. He stood by the window a moment and their absent expression crept into his eyes.

"Lydia—her used to be real partial to mignonette when a maid at school," he thought idly.

That was a long time ago. He had been at school with her, and he was old. He remembered the old black bench upon which they had sat in stiff correctness side by side. He had intended to do something in the "bookish" way when he was a man—the real world had not drawn him much even then. Lydia had married Tom Mason, had lived to rue the day and to be glad when she followed his coffin to the churchyard, and he, Josh, was a baker.

Clattering footsteps on the bare floor of the shop recalled him to the present and to the actual world. He turned away from the window and went into the shop.

The child who was waiting was very small and ill-clad. Her face was grimy; the chin features were hung round with rats' tails of dark hair.

"Mother, said as our would be the biggest cake of the lot."

"Perhaps it were," said the old fellow kindly; "but there he only two left now. Yes, it be a real big cake."

He lifted the sudden cake, and set it on the tray she held. The child received it eagerly. Then her face fell. She glanced in a crestfallen fashion at the cake that remained on the counter. "Our ain't high in the middle, like that one," said she.

"No, it ain't," said old Josh. He added absently: "That be one of Lydia Mason's ginger cakes. It has risen real well. Lydia's cakes all do rise."

The girl stared. She said stoutly: "My mother could make better cakes nor Mrs. Mason, if she tried."

"Ay, ay," said Josh.

"JOSH, YOU AIN'T ABLE TO LOOK AFTER YOURSELF!"

He paused with the duster in his hand, and something like dismay turned the corners of his mouth. "I be nice enough and the children," he said absently.

The children came rushing into the shop, two bright-eyed girls and a lanky boy. They fell upon the old man and bugged him warmly. "We ain't got a deal of time before we go back," they told him; "but mother says we kin stay to tea."

The mother emerged from the back room to confirm this—a stout, matronly woman with rather hard black eyes. "How do you do, uncle Josh? We be on our way back to Gooddick, but

"Ay, so I did," said the old man. His voice sounded even more husky.

"I desay," said the boy boastfully, "Uncle Josh has a cake in every single cupboard. When I am a man I'll bake, too, same as Uncle Josh."

The woman stirred impatiently. "We ain't got too much time, Uncle Josh. You tell me where the cloth is and I'll set to work an' get the tea."

"The cloth be in the table drawer," said the old man, turning his eyes upon her.

"Everything was ready," she turned sharply. "The cake, Uncle Josh—you keep it in a tin, I s'pose, to keep it dry."

"I'll fetch it. It'll be a new one," said Josh. He turned from them and went into the shop.

The children did not follow him; their mother was calling them to take their places round the table, and they dared not disobey. Josh stood for a moment or two with the ginger cake in his hands.

"There ain't a scrap o' cake in the house, an' the children'd be that disappointed," he thought. He turned the cake round; his fingers were trembling. "There ain't time to buy any, and I ain't got no one to send." He hesitated, then said aloud, "I be the third cake she has made this week; I desay she has made it to sell."

When tea was over, both mother and children went. The children bade Josh a vigorous farewell, and the mouths with which they kissed him were redolent with ginger. The old man stood at the back door and watched the little party as it crunched off across the fields. Then he turned, and his glance traveled toward the ginger cake—what was left of it; a couple of slices.

He had hardly seated himself when a small girl appeared. She carried a basket with a clean napkin in it. The napkin had a red border and fringe; Josh knew it well. She looked up at Josh as he sat behind the counter, and something—perhaps the unwonted sternness of his face—made her stutter as she asked: "Annie's cake—is it ready, Mr. Tebbutt?"

His bright eyes wandered, then came back to her face. He said steadily: "Ay, it be ready—in a sense. It be burnt, burnt to a cinder, Mary Kate. I misremember how I forgot it, and left it that long in the oven. Tell Annie as I be main sorry. Tell her that I'll pay for the cake. Here be a shilling, Mary Kate—she wrapped the coin in paper and placed it in the child's hand. "It be a shilling she charges for their gingerbread cakes."

The old man's hands trembled. He lifted a bundle of knitting from a shelf and began to ply the needles. When he had knitted for some little time he glanced at the clock. "Village be that quiet I may as well close as not," he muttered, and slipped down from his stool. He moved round the counter toward the door, and he had almost reached it when it swung open, and a tall, spare woman entered.

"Lydia Mason!" cried he. His face became suddenly ashy; that of a culprit. He felt back, his eyes fixed upon hers.

"Ay, Lydia Mason!" mocked she. Her eyes were as bright as his, and her lips had humor about them. She laid a shilling on the counter. Josh knew it was a shilling, though the coin was still in its paper covering. "Here's your shilling. I'd rather have my cake."

The old man's bright eyes fell. He said in a low tone, "It were that burnt, Lydia."

"Ah!" ejaculated she. Her eyes traveled over his drooping face. "Rosa-bell Moffatt's child sawed it when she came for her mother's cake. She has

Wrong and Right

By Elsie Endicott

WHAT do you think of father's condition, Dr. Blyth?" asked Mr. Hall, as the physician emerged from the sickroom.

"Somewhat serious," he admitted, "but with good care."

She cut short the conventional platitudes.

"When will he be able to go out again?"

"Not for weeks," emphatically. Her look of anxiety deepened.

"What is your father's business, Miss Hall?"

"He is manager of the local telephone system, and attends personally to repairing and keeping up the line."

"That means a great deal of hard work?" sympathically.

"Very particularly in the winter. The circuit comprises nearly 300 phones, and the line extends out into the country in all directions."

"Discontinue it in the winter," unthinkingly.

"The subscribers need it more then," gravely. "Nearly all of them are farmers and depend upon their telephones for communication with the village and with each other."

"If possible, keep from your father all anxiety concerning the business. I fear nervous prostration in his case."

During his round of calls Dr. Blyth thought often of the beautiful girl with the sweet, grave voice. He was a stranger in Lindsey, and was taking up his uncle's practice.

"Fred Hall—pick—that's too bad," was his uncle's comment. "But they'll manage all right, with a country doctor's knowledge of his patient's affairs. Mrs. Hall is strong and a good nurse. Fidelity understands the business thoroughly. You had she left a boy—it will take about the manager's salary to hire a man to come here from the city to do the outside work."

Dr. Blyth was disappointed when several days were made upon the sick manager without seeing Fidelity. She was constantly in his thought, and her lovely face seemed always before his eyes.

By chance his next call was in the evening. Fidelity met him in the hall as he was leaving.

"Do you feel encouraged, Dr. Blyth?"

"Yes, kindly, but his nervous condition is serious. Is he worrying about the business?"

"I think not," hopefully. "I hold his position as manager, and that encourages him—he has all confidence in my ability."

"You are a brave girl," enthusiastically. "You have some one for the outside work?"

She hesitated, coloring rosily.

"I—I have the services of a very competent lineman."

"Where is your 'central'?"

"Here," indicating the room adjoining.

"I've always been father's 'in-the-garage,'" smiling brightly.

He recalled his uncle's remarks regarding Fidelity's knowledge of the business.

On the following evening he saw Fidelity in her office. He reported hopefully of her father, and rejoiced in her words of praise for his professional care.

"I've often thought," she observed earnestly, "that I'd like to be a doctor."

Doctor Blyth smiled somewhat satirically.

"You forget, Miss Hall, I rather lately, your physical inability to cope with the hardships incident to a country doctor's life. He must have a strong form of cold—a delicate girl like you couldn't endure it."

A little flickering smile lurked for an instant at the corners of the pretty mouth.

"Don't you approve of women being physicians?"

"Frankly, Miss Hall, I do not."

"Aren't you somewhat old-fashioned, doctor, not to say antiquated, in your ideas?" quizzically.

"Perhaps," stily, "but there are many occupations for which a woman is wholly fitted that it seems regrettable she should enter upon one entirely unsuited to her."

"And may I ask," demurely, "what are some of the considerations suitable for women?"

"Well," hesitatingly, "first, home-making, a woman should be a good wife and mother, of course."

"Then, perhaps," quietly, "are domestic duties, such as—"

"School teaching," triumphantly, ing her father's illness, and the office being in her own home made it seem essentially womanly.

The thought of her was uppermost in his mind as he drove toward home on a cold, windy day in early spring. "Oh, if only I—!" he checked the half-muttered words, smiling tenderly as he dreamed a young man's beautiful day dreams of love and life.

Ahead of him, in the lonely country road, he saw a horse and buggy, standing by a telephone pole. Instinctively he looked up.

"The lineman!" he exclaimed interestedly. "I'm thankful Fidelity isn't with him, this miserable day."

The man climbed from the cross-arm and came down the pole with the swift ease acquired by constant practice.

"It's a little chap," thought the doctor. "Perhaps that's why Fidelity watches him so closely."

The lineman sprang into the buggy, with his coil of wire and bag of tools, driving rapidly away.

"I'll overtake him, and speak with him. I ought to be halfway decent to a little chap like that."

But the lineman's slim, boyish

JOHNSON BEGINS VALLEY TRIP TONIGHT

State Convention Results to Be Governor's Theme

At Lodi Tonight—Fresno County Meetings Wednesday

Governor Hiram W. Johnson begins today his whirlwind campaign through central California, as a part of his campaign for re-election, and will speak in Lodi tonight. With the holding of the state conventions, the lines of contest for state offices this year have been firmly drawn. The position of the candidates is known, and there will be a steady following up of the contest for the control of the next legislature between those who have dominated the conduct of the state affairs during the past four years and those who wish to return to previous political conditions. Governor Johnson will tell the people of the San Joaquin valley this week how the gathering of reactionary politicians at Sacramento last week impressed him from the point of view of one whose political career began with the fight on the state machine and who is now fighting to prevent a return of that machine to power through the agency of Fredricks of Los Angeles.

The schedule of addresses for the week is:

TONIGHT.
Lodi, meeting at 8 o'clock.
TOMORROW (TUESDAY).
Patterson, 12:15 p. m.
Crawford, 1:15 p. m.
Newman, 3 p. m.
Turlock, 8 p. m.

WEDNESDAY.
Fowler, 2 p. m.
Selma, 3 p. m.
Kingsburg, 4 p. m.
Fresno Auditorium, 8 p. m.

THURSDAY.
Lemoore, 3 p. m.
Hanford, 8 p. m.

FRIDAY.
Tulare, 1:30 p. m.
Exeter, 3:30 p. m.
Lindsay, 4:30 p. m.
Porterville, 8 p. m.

SATURDAY.
Delano, 2 p. m.
McFarland, 3:30 p. m.
Bakersfield, 8 p. m.

Preparations for the holding of the big meeting in the Fresno Auditorium here next Wednesday are in progress. Citizens have sent in word from every part of the county that they will attend, and the event is expected to be the greatest of the political year.

HOLD INITIAL JEW ORTHODOX SERVICE

Two Days' Observance of New Years Begins at Reserve Hall

Rabbi J. L. Abramovitch of San Francisco conducted the Jewish Orthodox services in the Reserve hall, 1931 J street, at 6:30 last night in marking the advent of the New Year. Close to seventy-five people attended the services, which were plain and simple, and along the lines of the ancient Jewish customs as practiced by the Orthodox division of the Jewish synagogue. This is the first time Orthodox services have been conducted in Fresno.

FRESNO HENS WIN AT STATE FAIR

Game Birds Shown by A. J. Dixon Make Clean Sweep

Among the many exhibitors in the poultry department at the State Fair, closed, none met with greater success than one of our citizens in the person of Arthur J. Dixon, with his well known stud of black red game Bantams.

In this variety, which was one of the strongest at the fair in the way of competition and quality, Dixon succeeded in winning all first prizes but one, and all specials allotted in this variety, aside from many other winnings.

The judge in this department, who has seen most of the leading winners on this coast the past 20 years, pronounced the game bantams at this show the finest ever seen on this coast, as well as being one of the strongest for competition.

L. B. CARY SUGGESTS CAMPAIGN WITH ROY TRABER

Candidate for Assembly Puts It Up to His Committee

No Action Taken by the Democrats on Progressive Challenge

The question as to whether there shall be a series of joint meetings held in the fifty-second assembly district between Assemblyman L. B. Cary, Progressive candidate for election, and Roy C. Traber, Democrat, is now in the hands of the Democratic county central committee for decision. Traber, challenged by Cary to conduct their campaign jointly, thereby eliminating any question of party lines in the discussion of the legislative issues involved, has placed himself in the hands of the county committee.

Assemblyman Cary recently addressed Traber as follows: "Dear Sir:—You have so many times spoken to me about our making a clean, frugal campaign, that it has occurred to me that it would be a right move in that direction to make a joint canvass of the district and discuss the several questions of public interest."

"I am sure such a procedure would be of vastly more interest to the voters than any personal discussion of each other's principles or motives in life. I therefore suggest that you meet me at such meetings as shall be arranged by our respective committees for the public discussion of the various questions of vital interest in the district, and that each committee shall select as its committee men such persons as shall be fit to adopt."

"That these committees may act in harmonious conjunction, I would ask an early reply to this letter."

"Very truly," "L. B. CARY."

No reply has been made to this suggestion of Cary's, but informally Traber has stated that he had put the matter up to the Democratic committee, and that it would be acted upon at the meeting of last Saturday. As far as known, however, no action has been taken.

SEES HIS CHILD FOR FIRST TIME IN COURT ROOM

Harry Smith Held to Answer for Not Supporting Wife and Baby

Harry L. Smith, aged 31, saw his child for the first time in the court room at Firebaugh Saturday when he appeared to answer to a charge of failing to provide for his wife and child. Smith was bound over to the Superior Court and was brought to the county jail yesterday by Constable Brown of Firebaugh. Smith married at South Dos Palos last February and left his wife after one month of married life. He was arrested in Stockton. The preliminary examination was held before Justice of the Peace Isaac Myers.

YOUNG CITIZENS START DRY WORK

Two hundred attended the young people's rally held at the First Methodist church last evening to launch the California dry work among the young people of Fresno. The attendance was largely made up of Christian Endeavor and Epworth League members. Rev. R. M. Brown of Los Angeles, who was scheduled to speak, for unknown causes, did not arrive. Rev. F. B. Cowdell, pastor of the church, spoke in his place.

YOU CANNOT be too careful of the children's eyes. If they do not need glasses an examination can do no harm. If they do need them, the benefit cannot be measured in money. Bring the children in today.

VALLEY STOCK FOR THE WAR?

Cattle and Horses Being Purchased as Fast as Offered

Though it has been strongly suspected that cattle and horses, to be eventually used for the British armies in the European war, are being purchased in the San Joaquin valley, and the price for the animals has been strongly on the increase, notwithstanding the competition furnished by the auto. Large preparations have been made for shipments from valley points to either the east or north, and dealers here are confident that the prices are certain to increase. In fact, many have added several dollars to the price of their steeds already.

Several large firms are engaged in the purchase of beef cattle in the valley. Lately they have been buying more than their accustomed share and have stated that they were preserving the excess purchases. This statement is doubted by numbers of purchasers and sellers locally. Denial that they have shipped carcasses of beef to Canada has been made by practically all of the firms operating in the valley, and though beef importations from Argentina are less than ever before, and receipts at the packing houses are less than for several years, no advance in price has as yet been made, though daily expected.

COUNTY HOSPITAL CROWDED TO DOORS

No Patients Are Received Unless It Is Absolutely Necessary

The county hospital is now in a crowded condition and no patients are being sent to the institution by the city emergency hospital unless it is absolutely necessary. All of the wards at the county hospital are crowded and it has been necessary to put in several extra beds. There were 150 patients at the county hospital yesterday. The crowded condition at the hospital is not due to an epidemic, but because of the number of patients that have applied to the county for treatment. It was stated at the hospital last night that as soon as one patient was turned out there were two waiting to be admitted. It was also stated that the hospital had been crowded for some time and that soon some other place of housing the patients would have to be provided.

W. L. Edwards was treated at the emergency hospital yesterday for chills and fever, but as his condition was not critical, he was not sent to the county hospital.

IRRIGATION EXPERTS WANTED FOR CONGRESS

Commercial Bodies to Ap- point Delegates for Canada

The twenty-first International Irrigation Congress will be held in Alberta, Calgary, Canada, for five days, starting on October 5. It will be a very important meeting and members are enrolled from all of the states of the union, as well as from the Canadian provinces and Mexico. The attendance is expected to be exceedingly large and numbers of the best irrigation engineers and flood control men of the country are expected to attend.

It is the intention of Fresno county to send a strong delegation to the congress if possible, and for that reason membership appointments have been placed with the Chamber of Commerce and the Commercial Club. Each organization is expected to have five men on the job, and the presidents, W. W. Phillips of the Chamber, and George S. Waterman of the club, would like to get in touch with those contemplating an Eastern trip, so that they might represent Fresno.

SHANNON, EVANGELIST, LEAVES SUDDENLY

Was Dissatisfied With Size of Tent and Numbers Attending

Rev. Dan Shannon, the Michigan evangelist, who was scheduled to hold revival services for two weeks in Fresno, has left town after holding two meetings and is now in Los Angeles. A telegram from Shannon states that he will not return owing to an October engagement in the south. It is reported that several local ministers are annoyed by Shannon's hasty leave-taking.

Shannon opened his meetings in Fresno a week ago yesterday but after the first meeting declared that the tent and crowds were too small. Rev. Don A. Allen, pastor of the Van Ness avenue M. E. church, and Rev. Van Dyke Todd, of the Towns Memorial church, who through Shannon in Fresno, immediately agreed to secure a larger tent and a different location. A lot at Mariposa and N streets was secured and Shannon promised to pack last Tuesday night.

The date of the meeting arrived but not to Shannon. Later it was learned that Shannon had taken a night train for Los Angeles.

Rev. Don A. Allen has been conducting the services since Shannon left. At a recent meeting of the committee in charge it was decided to continue the services through the present week.

EXAMINATION FOR STATE DOCTORS

State examinations for assistant physicians will be held in San Francisco, Los Angeles and Sacramento, October 9 and 10. Salaries range from $250 for internes to $200 a month for physicians. All citizens of the state between the ages of 21 and 60 are eligible for examination. Applications for examination should be filed with the California State Civil Service Commission on or before October 6.

CALIFORNIA RAISINS WELCOMED ABROAD

New Markets Found for Fruit by Associated Company

Seeded Product Takes First Place Over the Spanish Raisin

That the California raisin is fast gaining prestige as the staple product of that fruit in the leading markets of the world, has been demonstrated during the last three weeks by substantial shipments to dried fruit dealers of England, Denmark, New Zealand, Australia and the Orient by the California Associated Raisin company. New markets are being opened in all foreign countries for the raisin. From all indications the market will continue to broaden, due to the fact that the raisin of Spain turns to sugar when the seeds are removed. The California product keeps well under all climatic conditions, whether seeded or not. Especially England and Australia are becoming good markets for the seeded raisin.

In speaking of the new market fields, James Madison, manager of the Associated, said yesterday:

"Through the seedling of raisins, the California product is beginning to be known and asked for all over the world. There is an old saying, that 'a leaf will show which way the wind blows,' and it may be possible that this small beginning will lead to an outlet for any surplus we may have."

"The seedling of raisins started in the year 1907, with a few hundred tons, and there is now seeded annually 30,000 tons. That shows the increase of the consumption of muscat raisins by the process of seedling, and it may be possible that this small beginning of using seeded raisins in foreign countries will eventually lead to a very much greater demand. One carload has already gone to Great Britain, and we received orders the other day from Denmark, Austria, New Zealand, Australia and the Orient; both Japan and China use a limited quantity of our seeded raisins."

SUBWAY ON RIVER LINE IS BEING COMPLETED

To Pour Concrete Base This Week; Will Cost $50,000

Steel Bridge Will Be Constructed Later; Beach to Be Improved

The driving of the piles for the concrete base for the Fresno Traction Company's permanent subway under the Santa Fe tracks north of the city was completed yesterday and this week the pouring of cement will be started. One slice of the subway is being completed at a time so that the service to Fresno Beach and way stations is not crippled. The completion of the subway is the forerunner of work that will be done this winter on the line to Fresno Beach. The new subway will represent an expenditure of about $50,000. The subway, put in when the line was first opened was only for temporary use.

The last pile was driven yesterday by the big pile-driver and today work will be started excavating around the piles to prepare for the pouring of the cement. The piles are driven deep into the ground then excavated around so that they will be the base for the eight-foot cement foundation for the ties and rails. As soon as the subway is completed the steel bridge for the Santa Fe line will be constructed. Double tracks will be placed in the subway. Work will be completed in about a month.

Fresno Beach will be improved during the winter months so that next summer it will be one of the finest resorts in Central California. It is the intention of the Traction Company officials to plant trees and grass at the beach and put in walks. Amusement buildings will also be constructed.

SWISS ADS ADVISE AMERICANS TO LEAVE

Newspaper Tells How to Escape From Danger Zone

American advertisements in Swiss papers, telling of the methods for citizens of this nation getting out of the danger zone, give a most excellent idea of the difficulties of travel in Europe since the war broke out. The papers of this city received papers yesterday containing advertisements in English carried by the consuls, telling of trains that would leave that would carry Americans to safety.

The paper was of an issue of August 22, and stated that the Swiss government for Paris running on special time on Friday, August 22, and that a second train would leave the following Monday. The trip was to last twenty-five hours, though the ordinary peace running time is but eight hours, and passengers were notified to carry their own food and liquid refreshments.

After the arrival in Paris those fleeing from Switzerland were to receive further directions from the consuls there. Each of the trains were to travel in sections and before any were allowed to board them it was necessary to receive passes from the consuls. A complete record for identification with the consuls and the Swiss military authorities.

An advertisement from a German insurance company which has in effect insurance aggregating $250,000,000 in Europe stated that they would pay all losses, no matter whether the result of the war or not.
